Aquavit, London

London diners can be a jaded lot, but news that New York's two-Michelin-starred Aquavit was crossing the Pond to open an outpost in the British capital's St James's saw everyone sit up and reach for their phone. Fans of the East 55th Street flagship are in for a treat. The menu, created by its executive chef Emma Bengtsson and overseen in London by Henrik Ritzén, is styled as contemporary Nordic, which explains the seasonal forays into delicacies such as venison tartare, and cod with brown shrimp and smoked egg yolk. But the secret ingredient is the dining space, a grand, high-ceilinged room that interior designer Martin Brudnizki has fashioned after the soaring interiors of Gothenburg City Hall in western Sweden. After dinner, adjourn to the bar for Montecristo cigars and schnapps served in fish-shaped decanters designed by Svenskt Tenn. ★
